Message from the Chairman

Fellow Veterans,
 By any metric, our Veterans Day Weekend was a huge success. The parade, film festival and Lee Greenwood concert was an inspiration to all who attended. The Veterans Day committee worked tirelessly to plan all the events and raise the funds to support each event. We especially want to thank our sponsors who contributed money or gifts-in-kind to help pay for the weekend activities. We are extremely grateful to our city and county police and fire departments for their support in assisting with traffic and crowd control. We will acknowledge each of them with a personal letter of appreciation. In only our second year, our parade has grown exponentially. The marching units including local and military bands, JROTC units, veterans groups, military marching units and military vehicles has expanded since last year with more promised for next year. Our focus will be on military and veterans organizations and maintain that distinction in order to honor our veterans. We strongly encourage all local veterans' organizations to plan now to have an entry in next year's parade. Our Veterans Council would also like to thank Sen. Travis Hutson for sponsoring a fund raiser at Ancient City Brewing to help raise funds for the Veterans Day Weekend. A big shout out to Mark Miner for organizing the fund raiser. It was a fun event and raised an impressive amount of money to help defray expenses. Our Wreaths Across America chairman Sgt. Major Ray Quinn reports that our program for this year has raised the necessary funds to assure that every headstone will have a wreath placed on it at our ceremony on December 10. We appreciate the contributions from our community and everyone who purchased a wreath. I would like to thank all our veterans who took the time to vote in this year's election. I see this as our patriotic duty...one of the reasons why we as veterans served... to protect the right for our citizens to vote. On behalf of our Veterans Council, I would like to wish everyone a Happy Thanksgiving and a Very Merry Christmas. As Americans, we have a lot to be thankful for.

The military has a lot of traditions and symbolism, but have you ever wondered why U.S. military uniforms have American flags that are reversed? Maybe yes, maybe no, but we're going to tell you anyway because there is a fascinating reason behind it.

According to Providr, Army Regulation 670-1 states that, "The American flag patch is to be worn, right or left shoulder, so that the star field faces forward, or to the flag's own right."

When the a flag patch is worn in this way, the flag is facing the observer's right. This gives the effect of an American flag that is flying in the breeze as the soldier moves forward. So why is that important? Well, because when a soldier is viewed from his or her right side the flag patch looks like as if they were carrying a real American flag forward into battle.

Since the red, white and blue flag kind of defeats the purpose of camouflaged on uniforms the Army updated their battle dress uniform so that the patch is in a muted color.

The American flag isn't just displayed like this on military forms. Next time you're at the airport you can notice that U.S. flagged aircrafts also display the American flag in this "reversed" manner and is painted on the right side of the aircraft.

Gov. Scott Announces Kick-Off of Statewide Paychecks for Patriots Events for Florida Veterans

ORLANDO, Fla. – Today, Governor Rick Scott announced the kick-off of the 2016 Paychecks for Patriots, which matches up veterans with great careers in their communities. In recognition of Veterans Day, the Florida Department of Economic Opportunity (DEO) is partnering with the CareerSource Florida network, the Florida National Guard, the Florida Department of Veterans' Affairs and participating Florida employers to connect veterans and their families with job opportunities. Governor Scott has also declared November 7-11 as Paychecks for Patriots week.

Governor Rick Scott said, "Florida is proud to be the most military and veteran-friendly state in the nation, and we work hard to honor our many veterans and military members for their service and sacrifice. The annual Paychecks for Patriots events are a great way to give back to our heroes and their families by providing more opportunities to find meaningful employment so they can live the American Dream they work so hard to protect."

CareerSource regions across the state will be hosting Paychecks for Patriots events in November, to build connections between veteran jobseekers and Florida's job creators. The employers will include national companies, as well as many local employers. More than 1,700 military and veteran candidates and their family members who participated in the events across the state have gained employment as a result of prior Paychecks for Patriots.

Florida Department of Economic Opportunity Executive Director Cissy Proctor said, "I was honored to attend the Paychecks for Patriots event at CareerSource Escarosa last week, where I saw first-hand the positive impact these events make in the lives of Florida's veteran and military communities. The Paychecks for Patriots events match veterans and their families with employers who value the skills, knowledge and attributes our veterans have attained during their military service. These events are part of our ongoing effort to make Florida the most military-friendly and veteran-friendly state in the nation."

The CareerSource Florida network includes more than 175 workforce professionals statewide, themselves veterans, who are dedicated specifically to assisting other veterans with finding employment year-round. These professionals include specialists who provide intensive services to meet the needs of veterans with service-related disabilities. Last year, the CareerSource Florida network assisted more than 19,600 veterans who secured jobs.

CareerSource Florida President and CEO Chris Hart IV said, "Florida benefits from the third-highest military veteran population in the country through veterans' contributions and those of their family members to our workforce and our communities. These talented individuals are invaluable additions to any employer's team, and we sincerely appreciate the national and local businesses participating in this year's Paychecks for Patriots hiring fairs as well as the CareerSource Florida network partners who dedicate their time, year-round, to connecting veterans with great careers."

Events will be held across Florida during the month of November. More details are available at <http://floridajobs.org/paychecksforpatriots>.

Camp Blanding Honors Vietnam Veterans At Annual Veteran's Day Ceremony

By Gabriela DeAlmeida

Veterans and families gathered at Camp Blanding Joint Training Center in Starke Friday morning for the camp's annual Veteran's Day Ceremony. Col. Matt Johnson, Commander of Camp Blanding, set-up this year's event as a special commemoration of veterans from the Vietnam War.

The ceremony began at 11 a.m. with a processional by the Junior ROTC from Fleming Island, followed by the national anthem. Col. Johnson opened the ceremony by recognizing the families of retired or active duty military. A majority of the audience stood or raised their hand as the entire crowd applauded.

Col. Johnson touched on the importance of showing unending gratitude towards veterans, especially those who fought in Vietnam and were not welcomed home after the war. He then introduced Dr. George Kressman, president of the Camp Blanding Museum Association, who delivered opening remarks and welcomed close to 150 attendees.

The featured speaker was Vietnam veteran, Gary Newman, who served in the United States Military from 1959 to 1978. Newman now serves as president of Clay County's Chapter of Vietnam Veterans of America.

"As I talk to you today, you may find some points where I may get a little teary-eyed," Newman began. "I may get a little angry, but that's the way most of us [veterans] are at times."

He teared up as he recalled the despair and hopelessness he felt upon returning to the United States after the Vietnam war. Newman emphasized the lack of resources and support he and his companions faced—many of whom struggled with alcoholism, depression, PTSD and lack of necessary skills for the practically non-existent jobs.

"Society didn't want us," he added.

Newman also spoke about his experiences while serving on the USS Maddox in 1964, where he recalls not being able to shower during his first six months on board and washing his clothes in contaminated rivers. He spoke of the attacks by North Vietnamese torpedo boats in the Gulf of Tonkin. And he spoke of friends who ended up abandoned, imprisoned or dead as a result of returning home after the war to a country that did not support them.

“We must unify and come together and fight as one team,” he concluded.

Lt. Col. Scott Taylor closed out the ceremony by commemorating each branch of the military. Active military and veterans were asked to stand, or raise their hand if they were unable to stand, when the respective song for their branch of the military was played over the speakers. The crowd applauded for several minutes.

After the ceremony, Col. Johnson presented all Vietnam Veterans in attendance with a special lapel pin. Each Veteran was greeted with a handshake and a “thank you for your service” by speaker and the Junior ROTC.

Several tables were set up on the grounds with donated and captured war memorabilia from the Camp Blanding Museum for attendees to view. Among these items were military uniforms and refurbished weaponry primarily from World War II, said Chad Edwards, the museum’s armourer.

The Camp Blanding Museum is located on the Camp Blanding Joint Training grounds and is open to the public regularly. Camp Blanding was established in 1940 as a regional training center for troops in the south, and is now primarily a regional training for National Guard troops in Florida.

Veterans stand or raise their hand as the crowd applauds at Camp Blanding’s Annual Veteran’s Day ceremonies Nov. 11. This year’s event had a focus on “welcoming home” all Vietnam veterans in attendance. (Gabriela DeAlmeida/WUFT News)

St. Augustine woman finds WWII dog tags after Hurricane Matthew, returns them to veteran's son

by: Michael Yoshida, Action News Jax

A St. Augustine woman tells Action News Jax she found the tags using a metal detector.

Because the dog tags were in such good condition, she believes they were buried in the dunes and were only unearthed because of the storm. The amazing discovery led her to find the owner of the dog tags.

For 31 years, Barbara Galambos has searched beaches for hidden treasures.

"It's giving a little piece back from his history," Galambos said.

One of her latest finds was a pair of World War II dog tags.

"I said 'how do I find this guy, who owned them, how did they get here,'" Galambos said.

So Galambos started a search for Frank Rogers.

"I found his obituary, he passed away in 2010," Galambos said.

Not ready to give up, Galambos kept digging and found the Marine Corps veteran's son in South Carolina. She called and then mailed the dog tags to Frank "Buzz" Rogers IV.

"When I held them ... it's kind of like I got chills down my back," Rogers IV told Action News Jax over the phone. His father was a gifted pilot who joined the Marine Corps at the start of World War II.

"They chose to use him as a flight instructor for the Marine Corps pilots," Rogers IV said.

Rogers IV said in 1945, his father was transferred to Naval Air Station Jacksonville to prepare to go overseas. Pages from his father's flight log show the time he spent in Florida. A place where Rogers IV said his father enjoyed his other love – the beach.

"I'm assuming he went swimming ... and they got lost," Rogers IV said.

A piece of history lost, but now found and returned.

"The first time any human has touched them in 70 plus years ... it's just ... truly it's a miracle," Rogers IV said.

"I think I've made a friend for life... because he was so happy to get that memento back from his dad," Galambos said.

The war ended before Frank Rogers was sent overseas. Rogers IV said he plans on framing the dog tags and presenting them with some of his father's other military items.

From Veterans Council Chairman Bill Dudley and Publisher of The Patriot Reader: The following letter is from Bob Adelhelm, member of the Vets 4 Vets program in Jacksonville. Although the City of Jacksonville has specific language for those who are serving or have served in order for their name to appear on the Veterans Wall, I think that Bob raises a valid point in his appeal to the City. I feel he has a strong argument dealing with the home of record requirement. I go on record of supporting Bob's position in his letter to the Mayor.

Mayors Executive Order Makes Veterans Wall Meaningless...

Mayors recent executive order, apparently signed on Veterans Day, officially removes home of record from the criteria for being recognized on a hometown Veterans Memorial...It has in fact legitimized making being recognized on hometown memorial meaningless.

This is a foolish decision made to counter pushback concerning recent additions added to the wall who did not have a home of record in Jax. The DD214 stating home of record has traditionally been the document of proof used in determining the entry location of service members into the military. Now it seems simply being stationed in Jax and being from anywhere in the US makes one eligible to be recognized on a Veterans Memorial that was originally intended to honor those from Jax who served and sacrificed. Sadly, the mayor made a huge mistake and his decision has diminished the true meaning of being recognized on a hometown Veterans Memorial if anyone from anywhere can now be recognized simply because they have an address in Jax.

The executive order, however, ignored the criteria actually needing clarification relating to died or killed during "declared war". Home of record was pretty straight forward, but declared war not so. The US has not declared war since WWII and, in fact, has only declared war 11 times all prior to or as a result of WWII.

The mayor should have been better advised to change the declared war to combat hostiles or actions involving hostile actions. This would have covered most everything since WWII where US Forces were involved. Sadly, this has not changed and will continue to add to the obfuscation surrounding who and why one is being recognized on the wall.

Still have a hard time understanding how someone from New Hampshire, joined the military in NH, was killed in a domestic dispute in NH and is buried there is on a Jax Veterans Memorial, but it is what this new executive order has legitimized. Politics!

There was also no mention of the PTSD issue and the deaths that result from the invisible wounds of war or hostile actions of those from Jax. This is a major issue, needs to be addressed and not ignored!

Happy National Family Caregiver Month!

National Family Caregivers Month and the VA thanks, celebrates, and honors each and every family Caregiver of a Veteran! This month, VA takes time to honor and thank the Family Caregivers who provide essential support and care to our Veterans. Caregivers are truly an integral part of every healthcare team's goal to provide the best care possible. Family Caregivers provide an estimated $450 billion worth of uncompensated care to loved ones annually, according to Family Caregiver Alliance. An astonishing 65.7 million Caregivers, providing care to someone who is ill, disabled or aged, make up 29 percent of the U.S. adult population. A 2010 study by the National Alliance for Caregivers and the United Health Foundation found that 43% of Caregivers of Veterans report spending more than 40 hours a week providing care. We invite you to join us in honoring Caregivers for all they do. For more information please contact your Caregiver Support Coordinator at your local Medical center. <http://www.caregiver.va.gov/>

Should Vets with PTSD be Considered for the Purple Heart?

Matthew Russell From TheVeteransSite.com

The United States Military recognizes those who have been killed or wounded in battle with the Purple Heart. It's one of the oldest awards for such service in the country, and there have been countless recipients since it was first pinned on a soldier in 1917.

But what about those whose wounds we may never see? What about those whose wounds are deep within? Over the last decade, Post-traumatic stress disorder cases among service members have increased tremendously. The Pentagon isn't ignoring the fact either. New methods of treatment are being explored by the Department of Veterans Affairs. PTSD has gained national visibility but it's still not recognized as a wound meriting the Purple Heart.

Part of the reason for this is because PTSD is diagnosed after the fact; usually long after the event or events that prompted the mental wound, and often after a discharge from service. The VA doesn't have a system for relaying mental health records back to the military for the sake of awards. It's never been done, despite studies that have shown Purple Heart recipients actually live longer than their brothers in arms. The VA studied 10,255 veterans of World War II and the Korean War and found that those awarded the Purple Heart had longer lifespans than those who didn't.

Another reason veterans with PTSD are not eligible for the Purple Heart is because it's actually against the rules. In 2009 The Military Order of the Purple Heart stood by the Pentagon's decision to disqualify veterans with PTSD from receiving the Purple Heart. The MOPH released a statement on the matter in 2012.

"As an organization that is composed solely of Purple Heart recipients, we have supported fully the Pentagon's decision not to award the Purple Heart for PTSD. Obviously, we are very sympathetic to those who suffer this terrible disorder. You can hardly find anyone who has served in combat, and especially those who have been wounded in combat, that doesn't return with some form of PTSD. In recent years, the Military and the VA have become much more aware of its effects and are expanding and improving their treatment of PTSD."

"The criteria for this particular medal, however, is the suffering of physical wounds on the battlefield as the result of combat action by the enemies of the United States. Moreover, PTSD is a treatable disease — loss of a limb, or any combat wound for that matter, is permanent. And, what about those who feign the illness just to receive VA medical treatment; or, what about a group who witnesses a battlefield trauma together, but only one or two suffer from PTSD; should they all receive the Purple Heart?"

“The Purple Heart: Background and Issues for Congress,” by Barbara Salazar Torreon, an Analyst in Defense Budget and Military Manpower, was brought before Congress in 2015. In the report, Torreon claims that the amount of service members returning from Iraq and Afghanistan with traumatic brain injuries and post-traumatic stress issues have led the Department of Defense to revisit its Purple Heart criteria.

“DOD considers some TBIs eligible for the Purple Heart, as many of those injuries can be diagnosed using brain scans and other objective medical tests,” Torreon wrote. “However, there is continued debate on the validity of mental conditions, such as PTSD, being a part of the appropriate criteria for the Purple Heart. Congress, as well as various executive agencies and departments, is funding and conducting studies regarding PTSD.”

The National Alliance on Mental Illness is spearheading efforts to make veterans with PTSD eligible for the Purple Heart. The mission of the national grassroots advocacy group is to eliminate the stigma surrounding PTSD and to encourage those who suffer from it to get help.

“NAMI is drawing a line in the sand with the Department of Defense,” said NAMI Executive Director Michael J. Fitzpatrick. “Troops with invisible wounds are heroes. It’s time to honor them. It will also strike a tremendous blow against the stigma that often discourages individuals from seeking help when they need it.”

Whether they wear their awards or not, Fitzpatrick calls for respect and decency for all our veterans, and asks that Americans reach out and help them when necessary.

“Simple things make a difference,” he said. “Give veterans rides, watch their children or grant them extra time off from work in order to make it possible for them to get treatment. Our troops don’t leave wounded comrades behind. Don’t leave veterans or their families behind.”

It will take an act of Congress for veterans with PTSD to be considered for the Purple Heart, and that’s just what NAMI and other groups are putting their efforts behind precipitating. For those that have already been awarded the Purple Heart, physical scars can be painful reminders of war, and few come close to the story behind the scar on Pvt. Channing Moss’ side. Follow this link to read more about how Moss took an RPG to the stomach and lived to talk about it.

The Women In Military Service For America Memorial, located at Arlington National Cemetery, is in need of funding to remain open.

The Women's Memorial, located at the Ceremonial Entrance to Arlington National Cemetery, is a 33,000 sq. ft. Memorial and Education Center.

Dedicated on Oct. 18, 1997, the Memorial houses an exhibit gallery chronicling the history of women's service, a 196-seat theater, Hall of Honor, conference room, gift shop and an outdoor terrace and Court of Valor.

The heart of the Memorial is the Register, an interactive database that includes the name, picture, service history and awards and decorations of nearly 245,000 past and present servicewomen, who have taken their rightful place in history for generations to come by registering their service with the Memorial.

Honor Flights for Veterans Take Off Nationwide

As temperatures begin to rise in Washington, D.C., planeloads full of veterans are starting to arrive at the city's airports.

These trips, dubbed “honor flights,” are for American veterans who want to visit the nation’s war memorials. With generous community funding, each trip is free of charge.

The honor flight is a relatively new concept; the first flight took off in 2005. Each one is organized and executed by the Honor Flight Network, which is an umbrella organization that boasted 130 honor flight hubs in 44 states in 2015. Each hub works with communities and nonprofit organizations to raise money for the flights. The organization also accepts individual donations through its website.

Honor flights are directed primarily at World War II veterans, but many also include veterans of other wars and younger veterans who are suffering from terminal illnesses. Each trip is completely free of charge, so participants can enjoy the experience without financial worries. The trips make a number of stops, including the World War II Memorial and the Washington Monument; others also include a trip to the 9/11 Pentagon Memorial.

Because honor flights are designed to thank veterans for their service, they often involve a great deal of celebration. An honor flight departing from Tallahassee in May 2016 was sent off with local music acts. In Washington, D.C., the group was welcomed at different stops by current service members, cheering crowds and even Governor Rick Scott.

Honor flights depart from cities around the country. In April of 2016, flights left from Utah, Colorado, California, Missouri, Kansas and Arizona, as well as many more. The tour schedule is packed, and flights are expected to leave every week until the end of November.

Honor flights are a great way to thank veterans for their invaluable service to the country. Ponder our freedom and honor our veterans over a cup of coffee with this beautifully designed mug.

Hundreds Attend USS Indianapolis: Men Of Courage Premiere In Mobile

By Ashley Knight

It was an exciting night for folks in Mobile (November 13). They lined up by the hundreds to pack into Saenger theater to watch a movie about the human spirit.

“We tried to make the best movie possible and honor these men because they are heroes and everyone aboard that ship was doing a job,” says Executive Producer Tim Cavanaugh.

A movie that a long time coming finally arrived. Production staff, writers, and extras mingled with veterans while waiting for the movie to begin. The younger men portraying sailors in the movie, now having a greater respect for them.

“We shot in the water, and we were out there for eight hours and that had to be one of the hardest days of my life. And to think that these men were out there for five days, I couldn’t imagine what they had to go through,” says Actor Shamar Sanders.

A time for reflection, and a time for celebration. A celebration of life and the chance to tell this story.

“I get eaten in the movie, but, it was still an honor, you know, to be eaten by a shark!” says Actor Justin Nesbitt.

Family members of the original crew were also there. The daughter-in-law of Captain Charles McVay saying this story is one everyone needs to learn.

“They want it to be told, it needs to be told, young people in school do not know their history and they don’t understand the significance of this event, they don’t even know the event,” says Elaine McVay.

But now, so many more people know the story...and in a small way, now feel like they were apart of it.

“It was overwhelming. And exciting at the same time and for it to be a true story, and for me to be able to be a part of that, especially during a time like this, it was amazing,” says Sanders.

Celebrating Service

Home Depot associates band together to beautify Five S.T.A.R. Center

BY ANN FRIEDMAN ann.friedman@jacksonville.com

Nearly 50 Home Depot associates were spread throughout the Five S.T.A.R. Veterans Center on Acme Street on Nov. 3 to beautify the facility as part of the company's annual Celebration of Service campaign.

Associates painted, landscaped and installed fencing around the facility, which houses 22 displaced veterans and uses a four-phase program to help them live independently.

For Anthony Avila, who has worked as a millwork associate at the Orange Park Home Depot since February, volunteering at the veteran's center is especially meaningful as he is a veteran himself.

Avila served in the Navy for 13 years as a bosun mate first class.

"Home Depot does a lot for vets and it's another opportunity to give back," he said.

Avila added, "I have a lot of friends who are vets and not all of them can cope with what they've gone through. I've lost friends, and it's important to know that there are people who care and companies like Home Depot are out there and that they care."

Col. Len Loving, who is retired from the United States Marine Corps, serves as the CEO of Five S.T.A.R. Veterans Center and said the facility has put back more than 100 veterans into the workforce.

"Our building is a work in progress — it's old and things are always happening to it," he said. "We run on the volunteer support and the Home Depot has helped us big time."

Derek Fleming, store manager at the Yulee based Home Depot, said the company has a longstanding relationship with the veteran's center and has previously had more than 300 employees out to paint the outside of the now beige building, which was previously red, white and blue.

"We've done at least six projects here over the last few years, from tidying up the exterior to full-blown remodels," he said. "Home Depot is a huge entity in the American retail space and it's only obvious to take that revenue and use it to help the very people who shop at our stores and to help the less fortunate."

Trish Barton, director of counseling at the veterans center, looked at the needs of the residents to shape the mental health program.

"When they guys come in here, they're broken and they're self-medicating to mask what's going on," she said. "We've expanded beyond medications and looked at other strategies and modes of healing including art therapy, massage therapy and yoga."

Dave Orr, who conducts individual and group counseling sessions for residents, said it's difficult for those who return from combat to blend back into society.

“They’ve been in intense situations and they rely on each other and in the civilian world they don’t have that brotherhood or structure they’ve come to know,” he said. “There’s a tremendous sense of loss.”

Barton added that it’s hard for families of veterans to understand what their loved one has been through.

“Their family and community alienate them because they don’t know where they’ve been and think they’ll come back and blend in to life seamlessly,” she said. “They have nightmares and sights, sounds and smells can trigger memories and they don’t want to tell their family what they’re experiencing, which causes the foundation to fall apart over time.”

Oakleaf Town Center Home Depot Store Manager Les Crawford, who served in the Army as a sergeant for nearly eight years, said he hopes the community continues to support the veterans center in the future.

“It’s a tough adjustment back into civilian life and I want veterans to know there is a place that can help them and we’ll make sure it’s being kept up so they have a place to relax,” he said. “We can’t give as much as these soldiers have given us but we can get their lives back to normal.”

From DAV: Fullest possible accounting, bringing closure to the families of the missing

According to the Defense POW/MIA Accounting Agency (DPAA), 82,701 service members spanning from World War II to now are still missing or unaccounted for.

DAV is diligently working with the Department of Defense and other veterans service organizations (VSOs) to eliminate that number, with the goal of giving survivors of these men and women some long awaited closure.

One example of those efforts involves the remains of servicemen who died during the 1941 Pearl Harbor attack.

“During a conference call last year, the DPAA polled the participating VSOs on a decision to disinter or not to disinter the 388 remains of Marines and sailors from the USS Oklahoma,” said Vincent Darcangelo, DAV Interim POW/MIA Committee Chairperson. “In the interest of ‘fullest possible accounting,’ I voted to disinter.”

In April 2015, the Pentagon announced these remains associated with the ship would be exhumed from the National Memorial Cemetery of the Pacific and sent to the DPAA laboratory for forensic, DNA and genetic testing in the hope of identifying the fallen.

The remains associated with the Oklahoma are not the only work DPAA is doing regarding POW/MIA service members. The agency has teams all over the world looking for the final resting places of missing military personnel.

Darcangelo said that, so far in 2016, DPAA has announced positive identification of 46 military members previously listed as missing in action— 25 from World War II, 18 from Korea and three from Vietnam.

But many more families are still waiting.

“There are still 1,618 missing in Vietnam,” said Cindy Stonebraker, board member of the National League of POW/MIA Families. “My father is one of them.”

Air Force Lt. Col. Kenneth Stonebraker was shot down over North Vietnam on Oct. 28, 1968.

“He was a navigator on a nighttime recon mission in an RF-4C,” Stonebraker said. “It gives you hope knowing there are people on the ground over there actively working on finding him and others.”

Darcangelo agreed and called the POW/MIA subject one of importance and passion.

“DAV demonstrates its unyielding commitment of bringing each of our missing brothers and sisters home to family and loved ones waiting decades for answers,” he said.

The DPAA said VSOs are an integral part of accounting for the missing.

“Partnering with the veterans service organizations is extremely important to DPAA and our mission of accounting for Americans who made the ultimate sacrifice for our freedom,” said Johnie E. Webb Jr., DPAA deputy director of outreach and communications. “The VSOs play a major role in keeping the POW/MIA issue before the American public and the members of Congress to continue support for the issue. Their members remember the military creed, ‘I will never leave a fallen comrade,’ and pledge to do all they can to assist us in never leaving a fallen comrade.”

Stonebraker’s family will continue their vigil for her father.
